Long Sentences.

Ruskin, it is said, has written more sentences of thordinate length than any other classic writer of modern English prose. Frederic Harrison some years ago counted the words in a number of typical sentences, finding that in the earlier books it was no uncommot thing for Ruskin to run beyond the page before permitting himse and his readers the relief of a full stop. But in every case the sense is clear as day Wordsworth's poem on the "Charac ter of the Happy Warrior" is a notable example of sustained connections Apart from the opening and closing couplets the poem consists of two very ong compound sentences almost en tirely comprised of adjectival clauses. The longer of the two sentences contains fifty-seven decasyllabic lines This is probably a record in English verse.-Argonaut.

The president receives his salary in the shape of a check, the $50,000 being divided into eight checks of $4,166.67 each and four checks of $4,166.66 each. Thus one month out of every three the president receives 1 cent less on his check than he does the other two. Some such arrangement as this is necessary, as, of course, $50,000 is not exactly divisible by twelve.

> How to Guess Any Number. Desire one of the company to think of any number she chooses, provided it be even. Tell her to triple it, halve the product, triple this half and then tell you how many times nine will go into this last number. Multiply this by two and it will produce the original number. Thus suppose 4 to be the number thought of. You triple it, making it 12; halve this product, leaving 6; again triple this, making 18, in which 9 will go twice. This twice, multiplied by 2, gives you 4, the number thought of. Or, to give another example, suppose 6 to be the number. Triple it, 18; halve this, 9; triple it again, 27. You ask how many times 9 will go into the result and, being told three times, multiply 3 by 2, and the

On What Their Fate Depended. During the week certain members of the Scotch minister's flock had been paying overmuch attention to sampling the local whisky, and the minister took advantage of his position in the pulpit to administer gentle reproof. "An' I tell ye, one an' all, ye're on the way to perdection!" he cried. At that moment a fly settled on the Bible before him. He raised his fist. "Ye're gaein' tae hell!" he shouted. "An' ye'll all get there, just sae sure ca-sae sure as I ding the life out o' this flee!" His fist crashed down as he uttered the words. Then he looked to see the result of his handiwork. The Wrestler's Pride.

In olden times a wrestler who had, won a belt used to go to his village church on the following Sunday wearing the belt. On the Sunday following that he went to some neighboring church in his beit and claimed precedence over the other young fellows. Nearly all the champions were men great in girth and weight. Old Steadman, accounted by many the most powerful wrestler ever known, was twenty stone weight. - Manchester Guardian.

How the Dutch Eat.

A Dutch meal is always reminiscent of a game of cards, for the mother deals out all round the table, and when that first hand is played out she deals afresh, and so on until the dish is empty. There is no promiscuous serving, as with us, and the quick feeder (if such a person could exist in leisurely Holland) reaps no advantage. If meals are to be likened to games of cards, our meals in Dutch eyes must look like games of "grab."—London Queen.
